

members and department heads leave town service.

The CCC's Housing and Economic Development grants are awarded to municipalities wishing to create an economic development plan that engages diverse stakeholders, leverages local and regional economic strengths and assets, encourages innovation and entrepreneurship, and/or promotes workforce development planning and implementation.

With the Housing and Economic Development grant, the town will work with the UMass Boston Collins Center and Barrett Planning Group to develop an economic development guide. The guide will outline economic development opportunities in the downtown area.

"On behalf of the Town of Ludlow, I would like to thank the Baker-Polito administration for awarding our community these significant funding opportunities," Strange said. "These awards will help us develop two key plans which will drive Ludlow toward success."

The CCC was developed by the Baker-Polito Administration in an effort to facilitate a stronger partnership between municipalities and state government in order to support communities in efforts to improve their services.
